

Healthier teams, built on evidence rather than slogans.

Psychology-informed support for HR and People teams: burnout prevention, psychological safety, leadership wellbeing and practical workshops that respect how organizations actually work.

Pressure rarely announces itself.

By the time burnout is visible in attrition data, it has usually been building for months in workload, unclear expectations and managers who did not know what to say. Most wellbeing programmes arrive too late and too generic.

I work differently. Alongside my practice I work within the HR function of a US-headquartered international company, so sessions start from operational reality rather than from a model.

Burnout & workload

Recognising early signals in workload, recovery and availability before they escalate.

Psychological safety

Whether people can raise problems early without cost to their standing.

Manager capability

Equipping managers for the conversations they currently avoid.

Distributed teams

Remote work, cross-cultural norms and relocation pressure.

Five practical formats.

Workplace Wellbeing Workshop

A practical 90-minute session on burnout prevention, stress awareness, emotional regulation and communication under pressure.

Leadership Wellbeing Session

For managers and team leads: psychological safety, difficult conversations and recognising burnout risk.

When an Employee Is Struggling

The conversation managers most fear. Drawn from four years of frontline crisis intervention and translated into what a manager can actually do.

Employee Support Pathway

Confidential psychological support for employees facing stress, burnout risk, relocation or professional pressure.

Ongoing Wellbeing Partner

A flexible collaboration combining workshops, consultations, employee support and wellbeing initiatives over time.

Where the work comes from.

- Bachelor's Degree in Clinical Psychology and two years counseling adults
- Master's in Industrial & Organizational Psychology
- Doctoral research on burnout, leadership and wellbeing across approximately 30 Spanish organizations
- Four years in suicide prevention and crisis intervention
- Working inside the HR function of a US-headquartered international company
- Sessions delivered in English, Spanish and Serbian

"It is a topic that in Chile is often still taboo, but if we genuinely want to create change it has to start with proper awareness, so we can improve working life for current and future generations."
